The purpose of this research is to find out the most frequent politeness strategies used by students and the experiences they get after using politeness strategies when presenting at an EFL class at UIN Fatmawati Sukarno Bengkulu. The design of this research was qualitative descriptive. The subject of this research were eleven EFL students in the third semester of the English language education study program at UIN Fatmawati Sukarno Bengkulu. To collect data, the researcher used observation and interview as the research instruments. The results of this study showed that eighteen students utterances were found by the researcher to consist of four student utterances, including bald-on record, and fourteen student utterances on students' presentations in the classroom, including positive politeness strategies. The politeness strategy most frequently used by EFL students at UIN Fatmawati Sukarno Bengkulu is a positive politeness strategy. Then based on interviews with students, it can be concluded that the use of politeness strategies in delivering a presentation can cause so many positive things, such as being able to make presentations more interesting and format, making the material presented easier to understand by listeners so as to cause a good response from them, and that by using a politeness strategy, listeners could be more enthusiastic.
